ALEX RAYMOND'S CLASSIC COMIC STRIP OF THE 1930's,

FLASH GORDON

LIMITED COLLECTOR'S EDITION

Now, in the midst of the comic strip explosion, NOSTALGIA PRESS is proud to offer in a hard-bound limited edition, the most beautiful example of comic art ever produced. The golden age of FLASH GORDON from the 1930's produced comic art that steps beyond Camp and Pop into the realm of Fine Art. See Flash, Dale and Dr. Zarkov once again battle the tyrant of Mongo, Ming.

END

This had been one of Ugh's good days. He had started the morning with an empty tummy and little hope of filling it without a long, desperate search for food. But lady luck was with him. On his very first search into the tangled brush of his canyon, he stumbled onto a batch of berries and fruit the like of which he had never seen!

He was so delighted with his unexpected find that he decided to have a feast in his cave to celebrate the day's discovery. He controlled his hunger and carried the fruit and berries back to his cave. Not once on the many trips it took did he weaken and sample the goodies. If it was going to be a feast, he wanted it to be a good one. He knew the exercise would increase his enjoyment of the meal to come.

By late afternoon, Ugh had a five foot pile of food in the center of his cave. He carefully pulled his boulder door shut and started his feast. Everything was delicious. The berries were juicy and all of the fruit was ripe to a turn. For hours the hungry caveman stuffed himself until the last goodie was gone. Stumbling across the cave he fell onto his grass bed. To heck with washing the juice from his face. There was plenty of time to do that in the morning.

Ugh slept peacefully until an hour before dawn. His discomfort started with a small twitch in his tummy that quickly changed into the grandaddy of all tummy aches. A thousand daggers were slashing back and forth and the pain catapulted Ugh out of his bed with a roar of anguish.

Never before in the short history of mankind had any man experienced such torture!

Grasping his tummy, Ugh dashed forward . . . action, to get away from the pain, was all he could think about. CRASH!! The poor tortured caveman ran into the wall of the cave.

Ugh lay stunned on the floor trying to figure out what had happened. He was fully awake now and was terribly thirsty. He crawled to the boulder door and opened it. It was a short walk to the stream and he felt much better after a cool drink.

Some wild beast must have attacked him during the night, he thought. Some creature had hidden in his cave and waited until he had gone to sleep before jumping on his tummy. He'd show the monster he couldn't get away with that kind of trick. Picking up the biggest club he could find, Ugh crept back to the cave and started to sneak in.

One, two, three steps he took. Where was the monster? YIKE! In front of him was the most evil, gruesome beast, Ugh had ever seen. With a roar of pure fright, the caveman dropped the club, spun about and made for the hills across the canyon. Normal jungle beasts, Ugh could face, but not something that looked like that!

The terror that drove the caveman away from his home, never to return, was nothing but a berry juice picture of himself left on the cave wall when he crashed into it. His unwashed face had made a perfect wall painting.

If only Ugh's courage had permitted him to return to the cave, he would have realized he had not only made the world's first painting, but he would have know too, that he had invented printing millions of years ahead of anyone else.
